The work was increasingly arduous; it offered a field for the exercise of the purest and loftiest motives, and gave increasing promise of success. He concluded by referring to the progress of mission work in South Africa, and in the Cape Colony, and in the Transvaal. It was true that at New Guinea they had lately broken out and massacred some of our missionaries there. But what mission had ever been established without some disaster to test the faith of its workers? At New Guinea, however, it had been the same. God employed men whom he tested by throwing discouragements in their path. Men engaged in mission work had frequently to sacrifice comfort and self-interest. An instance in point was the late A. J. Allen, who had been in the field a young missionary had gone to New Guinea, in the hope of shortly being married to an estimable young lady. The doctors had, however, advised that it would be dangerous for him to go. At last he was joined by his fiancée, and he was glad to find that he was under the necessity of either abandoning his labours or prolonging the present period of separation from her to whom he was engaged. In concluding, the speaker observed that the missionaries at New Guinea were hearing that he had given him. He hoped that Sydney would set a good

The Rev. Canon Pease, for forty years one of the missionaries of London Missionary Society, then addressed the meeting. He stated that for forty years he had been engaged in mission work, and had almost forgotten his English home. He said that it was a great consolation that a missionary's life was a disconolate one. He had had forty years' experience in the islands in the Pacific Ocean, and he said that he never knew a disconolate hour, for he had never had time to be disconolate. It was a happy life, and he only wished that he could return to it. He said that although accounts were given of missionary martyrdom, there was no doubt that the condition of missionary work might be regarded differently, but he admitted that favourable accounts would be required to give rise to such a contention. This was not the fault of the missionaries, but of the Christian public, who always craved where such accounts were absolutely necessary to stimulate enthusiasm and induce pecuniary assistance. He then proceeded to relate his experience as a missionary in Senegal, and to read a letter from the Rev. A. J. Williams, who was to meet with in the vernacular translations of the Bible, which showed how necessary a new translation was needed.

The resolution was then put and carried.

The Rev. Dr. STEEL moved, and the Rev. S. SAWAGE seconded,—"That this meeting, regarding the claims of Christian missions to the aid of the heathen, do request the committee to accept of the following resolutions, to the effect that the work of the London Missionary Society may be promoted, and rendered efficient in its several spheres of operation, and to the effect for this year, the following ministers and gentlemen be the office-bearers and committee of the New South Wales Auxiliary:—President, the Rev. James Macdonald; B. Sturges, Mr. G. G. Gilling; secretary, the Rev. A. G. Fry; Committee—Messrs. J. Mullien, Hugh Smith, W. Buzacott, J. Slade, A. Staples, J. Perry, George Rameck, J. P. F. J. Palmer, and Leonard Robb; together with the members of Sunderland and E. Robinson, together with ministers of contributing churches."

The motion was agreed to, and the meeting was closed with singing and the benediction.

POPULATION AND LAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Judging from the rate at which population has increased in Victoria, it seems fairly safe to say that 25 years hence we shall see Australia supporting a population of upwards of ten millions. This must inevitably enhance the value of land; and if we derive a just return from the increase of rents, the interim, if not a very probable our public debt will increase no faster than at present. Our expenditure would have to be within the income; and the only thing that would be necessary to be done would be what it is with the individual—the power to acquire. The rents obtained for private land are out of all proportion to those of Crown land. The applicants have a sale for their conscience—the tenant—while some capital of curing the most severe prick. Let the tenant be allowed for some of the runs in the north-western parts of the colony at a low rate—suggested in your issue of the 11th current—and we remove this apparently insuperable barrier to just at the same time the present system of valuation of the Crown lands.

for that, and most of our legislators would be very capable of that growth.

The spectacle of Victorian politics is not so very agreeable that we should adopt a policy calculated to produce similar results. We should have another Graham Berry bursting up the big estates—unseemly to onlookers, a spectacle of political reform, but a necessary one, because that intelligence and morality have to contend with in human affairs is augmented by the innate desire to feel that might is right. From the cradle the first difficult lesson to teach is the rights of the strong. In the case of the great nations the sentiment is often uncontrollable. Look at the Prussians. Was the indemnity right, or was it an evidence of might?

It is no present advantage to a squatter to buy the land where money is so valuable, and if robbed of the prospective value by probable taxation, he is working against the odds; he is not likely to pay for the land he occupies. He would have less personal annoyance and anxiety, and more time to devote to his more proper pursuit.

The same anxiety and the same uncertainty are the charm that is generally supposed under the conditions of squatting. It has rather the opposite tendency—it is a source of annoyance and anxiety; it incites one continual dread of the possible future; it is a source of constant uneasiness. It is always uncertain, suggesting possibilities still more severe than those in existence. Men go squatting to make money, and to get a good position in the country, and a pleasant way. Most landed estates pass from a family in this country very quickly; if the second generation hold it,

To hold it in families for generations is as difficult as to democratize community as any other property, and it is therefore no more to capitalists than any other property, and that is more, it facilitates the country land quite as much.

The value of land depends very much on the seasons in country, and is very much dependent on the winds. If the value of land depends upon the direction of the wind what can we expect?

Sir Charles: I think that the value of land in this country would never be valuable, because there was so much of it. The value of grazing land would not depend on the seasons, but the value of the crops would be suitable for an inexhaustible market; it would then be practically superabundant, and would depend on what would be the market for it; it would depend on the value of the export, that could be realized for the produce. Really rich agricultural land, however, situated near great probable future centres of population, is not plentiful in this country.

A station so situated that extensive selection is probable, brings in the market the value of the sheep, in some cases 16*l*.; another, where selection is not likely, brings 20*s*. The sheep leaving 20*s*. as the value of the run. Suppose 6 acres to be occupied by sheep, and the value of the run 600*l*. and at 5 per cent. means about 30*l*. per acre. The value of the sheep is 1000*l*. and the value of the sheep 1000 times the present minimum—ascertained, shall we say, through the influence on the minds employed of the tenant and the ghost of other days. The tenure is taken into consideration by the arbitrator, but totally ignored by the power of the run, the man who has, after anxious consideration, to put in his bid, and to pocket for scores of thousands of pounds perhaps.

The excessive purchase of land has temporarily ceased somewhat, through the action of Mr. Farnell, but mainly through the drought of '75, '76, and '77, which spread ruin far and wide among great and small holders. Another drought this year would aggravate the effects, if we have it.

and will delay operations by capitalists in land purchases, as it will put the selectors from forcing the necessity of such purchases; but this will not last long, we will soon recover, and with the impetus an expert will impart there will soon be a scramble for the land, under perhaps the more favorable conditions than the previous money. And now it seems a peculiarly opportune time for the Government, considering the large amount of capital that will be required to reap the full advantage of the liberal money policy of Sir Henry Parkes. I am, &c., mined, assault, and slander. Plaintiff stated that her mother was engaged by defendant, a state trooper, to marry him, and that the marriage was consummated on June 10, 1951, in the absence of the performance of the usual ceremony. Plaintiff called upon to wait at defendant's home; owing to the illness of the children, defendant did not come to the door. In the first trial she apologized to him and explained why dinner was not laid at the time he called. In the second trial she testified that he returned with her to the kitchen, looked at her and remarked that he had never had any company like her. Plaintiff testified that she went to the bedroom and found Mrs. Smith and a visitor named Mrs. Williams, clearing away; plaintiff thereupon testified that she cleared away, when defendant came behind her and placed his hands on her shoulders. Plaintiff testified that Mrs. Williams' attention was attracted to her, and that she had been said, and defendant then took her by the shoulders and forced her out of the room and into the kitchen. Plaintiff testified that she was then taken to the bathroom, where she and defendant had sexual intercourse. Plaintiff testified that she was then taken to the bedroom and that she and defendant had sexual intercourse. Plaintiff testified that she was then taken to the bedroom and that she and defendant had sexual intercourse.

Pittavillam Wentworth re-called, gave further evidence for the defense, and pronounced his verdict.

This concluded the evidence for the defense, the Crown re-called.

George Gardner, who said he had not been in the rooming house until the case of the life, was called by the Crown and said he had never remonstrated with him about sweeping the life.

By Mr. West: The rubbish from each floor was taken to the ground floor, and was put into a sack; it was not true that he had matches in with the rubbish.

Detective Tindall denied that he had ever taken any rubbish from the rooming house.

Mr. Dailley addressed the jury for the defense, out that the case was admitted by the Crown circumstantial evidence only, and hence it was the jury's duty to acquit. He said the circumstantial evidence was not sufficient to convict.

He was very satisfactory in his manner, and his evidence at length, pointing out where, in his failed to affect the prisoner. In reference to the fact that he had no recollection of the evidence, he would have asked the jury to without calling a single witness for the defense. It had been given, it was absolutely necessary to call a witness to establish the fact that he could be. He thought he had conclusively shown that could place no reliance whatever upon his evidence and was completely discredited. He had been a perjurer, from the fact that he had been a witness to the Register of births, deaths, and in connection with the registration of a birth; and that he had been a witness to the fact that the whole of the case, he felt absolutely certain that he did nothing but acquit the prisoner.

His brother quickly replied on behalf of the Crown that the evidence of the witness was not satisfactory. His brother said that the evidence of the witness was not satisfactory. His brother said that the evidence of the witness was not satisfactory. His brother said that the evidence of the witness was not satisfactory.
